media kit

There are two facts you need to remember:

According to Nielsen Media Research, 72 percent of 18- to 34-year-olds spend time online.

According to site statistics, sixsix magazine takes a full 91.3 percent of its readership from that age group. In addition, the magazine is actively looking for online advertisers.

While others cover just events, fighting for coverage on the Next Big Thing or that Great Cool Show, we take a different approach, discussing events important and relevant to our readers. Chicago serves as the foundation, and all narratives build from the simple day-in and day-out happenings of the city. It's a forum for the ideas, the fashion, the stories and, most of all, the provocative.

In just a few short months, sixsix has made its mark, sponsoring DJ events at the Metro and hosting the Suicide Girls, a nationally-touring revue show, interviewing John Hughes III - son of filmmaker John Hughes and the founder of a Chicago-based record label - and featuring the 30 movers and shakers in the city in the magazine's most ambitious story to date, "30 Under 30."

sixsix magazine covers all that influences, entertains and affects Chicago and its residents, offering features, photo essays, debates and fashion aimed at the 20- or 30-somethings that help to shape and change our diverse and dynamic city.

sixosix readers are a diverse and technologically savvy group. Since its launch on January 1, 2004, the www.606mag.com site has seen more than 1,127,089 hits, and numbers continue to grow with each passing month. Issue five, released in May, has served more than 100,000 pages, up from 26,720 for the inaugural issue.

In addition, sixosix readers are a loyal bunch. A full 95 percent of all new readers stay to read previous issues, and the average reader takes in 20 page views per session - a huge gap from Nielsen's research, which show the Internet standard to be six views. Readers come back to the site to view new comments posted at the bottom of each section - which adds a chat board-like functionality to the magazine - giving sixosix 2.25 visits per month from the average unique user. According to Nielsen, the average Internet user spends less than one minute on a given site. sixosix boasts an average stay of more than eight minutes.

Projected page views give the magazine a bright future. Based on current growth rates, the site will near 800,000 page views by December 2004.

In addition to its online presence, sixosix magazine is actively looking break into the print market as well. With such a strong - and constantly growing - Web base, the magazine will prove to be among the front runners in Chicago publishing.
